Twenty-First Week in Ordinary Time

There is a big question behind today's readings. It is posed, in the Gospel reading, when a man asks Jesus "Sir, will there be only a few saved". It is the sort of question, I suspect, that we would all like to ask and that we would all want to be included in the answer; but there is no answer that we could receive in this world. We will only know the answer in the next.

So, as usual, we follow the clues and try to build our faith in everlasting life by clinging to whatever we discover. Isaiah is very reassuring; "The Lord says this, I am coming to gather the nations of every language". The Jews believed that their God was only for them and for no others. Time and again the prophets spoke of other people who would come to know the one true God but still the Jews insisted that salvation was for them alone. In today's first reading Isaiah again warns them, and reassures us, that others will come to share in the Kingdom.

Then there is a message from the writer of Hebrews. He reminds us that we are sons and daughters of God; however, with this gift, comes responsibilities. It is not enough to be sons and daughters; we must act as such and be faithful to the Father. Each family is taught how to behave by their parents; if we want to be sons and daughters of God then we must listen to the Father and turn away from sin. If we do not, then how can we enter the Kingdom of Heaven?

We can only come to God if we know Him, and He knows us. How do we do this? By keeping His commandments and following His ways. Through prayer, scripture, and worship we come close to God; if we do not pray to Him, listen to His Word, and receive the sacraments then how can we come to know Him. Through our relationships with others, we follow Christ, we must become Christ-like so that He may recognise us. So, stay true to the Gospel and do not allow yourself to be in the position where Jesus may say to you "I do not know where you come from". David Frank
